

Charge Dynamics in Advanced Materials with Spatial Sensitivity

Jason Hancock
University of Connecticut

The 21st century brings new tools for probing matter on time and length scales relevant to new physics in materials. This talk will briefly outline some of these recent advances and point the way toward further progress. Accomplishments in the areas of resonant X-ray techniques as well as optical methods will be presented.